Developing Emotional Competencies of Managers: Validation of a New Model of Emotional Intelligence

by

Abstract

Managers' interest in the concept of emotional intelligence (EI) has grown steadily due to the cumulative published articles and books promoting EI's benefits. Their authors have used or designed various tools for measuring EI, most of them raising important psychometric, cultural and contextual issues. After addressing some of these limitations, we propose an innovative seven-step context-based model of EI, specifically dedicated to a population of managers. Initial validation findings, implications for management, limitations, and future intercultural research will be discussed.

Bio of Speakers

Dr. Lisa Bellinghausen

PhD in Psychology (Paris Descartes), Lisa is a teacher and researcher on emotional intelligence and its development at emlyon business school. She also supports companies in the areas of psycho-social risk management, emotional skill development and well-being. She is one of the co-authors of the Seven-Step Model of Emotional Intelligence and of the QE-Pro (EIQM) test to profile manager's and CEO's emotional intelligence. The QE-Pro was launched in France in 2015 and the EIQM - Emotional Intelligence Quotient for Managers (Haag, C., Bellinghausen, L., Jilinskaya-Pandey, M. 2019) is being launched in India in 2019.
